Activity 1: Listening

Welcome to a practice listening task for the ISE III.

You are going to hear a talk about what it is like to be transgendered. You will hear the talk twice. The first time, just listen. Then I'll ask you to tell me generally what the speaker is talking about. Are you ready?

Audio Script

When we are born, our gender is already assigned to us, even well before we know what gender we are. For most, this isn't even a problem as we discover throughout the next years of our lives what it is to be male or female. Having said that, has it ever occurred to you what it might be like for somebody that is actually transgender to have to live against the expectations and ridicule of others, who have decided they are the given gender listed on their birth certificate? By all means, it is a complicated issue for those individuals and their families. What does it really mean to have a gender in society? It is a big if that most people have actually contemplated in-depth to really consider all the complications one has to go through by being transgendered and feeling as though the restrictions in society have clipped their wings to live the life that they want to.

Turning to how some individuals are referred to when looking at terminology. The lack of social knowledge on given terminology needs resolving since many individuals have widely agreed that they feel misunderstood with their gender and sexual preferences. First we have transgender people. One considers themselves transgender when that person's gender doesn't match the sex they were given at birth. It should be noted that being transgendered isn't concentrating on a sexual orientation owing to that transgendered people can be of all sexual preferences that have been referred to as heterosexual, gay, lesbian, bisexual and queer. Another term to consider is cisgender. A cisgender person is someone whose gender matches what was assigned to them at birth. If we fully consider this, then there is a realization that this does not refer to one's sexual preferences, such as terms as "being straight". Furthermore, another term would be non-binary. To be non-binary, this type of person identifies themselves outside of being female or male. That is to say they might have associated with more than one gender or have been found to be not identifying with any gender at all. By the same token, they could even have generated a fluctuating gender identity. Another term that some people relate to is known as intersex. Somebody who considers themselves intersex means that this individual's sex-related characteristics don't necessarily align with either gender, be it male or female.

In addition to the terminology mentioned, there should be some issues that ought to be known. To start, many know that being a transgender individual often brings about some negative reaction, like facing discrimination. When a transgender individual has to get documents that show their identification, it is often difficult to obtain accurate documentation. Many of these individuals end up having to carry around driver's licenses and passports that don't represent them accurately and they are eager to change this aspect and wish they could do so. It just so happens to be that it is reported that 78 percent of transgendered individuals suffer through harassment from early school years all the way up to graduation. Furthermore, it seems preposterous that one in five individuals are stated that they are denied medical care that is needed. It only seems logical that something as basic as medical care, that everybody wants having available to them, would be a basic human right that shouldn't be denied ever.

Finally, there are things that we have to make ourselves aware of, on what we should and shouldn't do in reference to interacting with transgendered people and the world around us. For instance, Not only should a transgender person not be asked for information about their body by another person, but also they shouldn't be questioned about their medical care. Something else to consider is that assuming that you know somebody is indeed transgendered, it must never be put forward that somebody is transgendered without receiving their permission. Last but not least, there is a big chance that the transgendered individual has preferences in how they refer to themselves. This should be considered and respected. For the sake of example, they may very well refer to themselves with plural pronouns, such as "they" or "them", so as to not have themselves stem from a given gender. For this reason, it is extremely important to modify virtually all of our vocabulary in using the same style of language, with the goal of making the other individual feel more included and appreciated. Only when we respect the privacy and wishes of other people, will we flourish and advance in mutual respect as a society.

As a whole, many people's insight on this issue, as well as my own, is that it is important to stay informed. For the trans individual, this lies in the root of what is equal human rights. If only society didn't put focus on gender differences, society would have adapted better to each person's individual choices and needs.

Can you tell me in one or two sentences what the speaker was talking about?

Now listen to the talk again. This time make some notes as you listen, if you want to. Then I'll ask you to tell me about the point of view of the speaker, the different terminology used for transgendered individuals, issues that should be known, as well as things you should and shouldn't do.

Now tell me about the point of view of the speaker, the different terminology used for transgendered individuals, issues that should be known, as well as things you should and shouldn't do. You have one minute to talk.

This is the end of the listening task.
